In my view this is a little used composition when artists choose a selection of Christmas tracks for a single or album, so when the latest seasonal single entitled Little Drummer Boy landed on my desk to review I was elated, I have much respect for Joey Curtin, she has produced some splendid work during her career, and with this new release she can add to that ever growing list of musical success.

Her performance here is delightfully soft and respectful, but one that contains a steady onward movement, the drum roll and added keyboards also gives the piece a seasonal Celtic feel to the song as well. Curtin should be proud of this one, it is utterly addictive.
