Richard Dillon is back with another single, this time curiously entitled Puddle Jumper. There is something however, most endearing about this track, it's one of those tracks that you just don't mind listening to over and over. There is a real lightness to its construction, but it also contains a sense of vibrancy and a laid back essence of fun too.

The percussion and brass give it a jazzy feel, but the constant narration from the piano weaves a tale of rainy nights in the city, watching people running from the downpours and perhaps even leaping the odd puddle or two as they scurry home. Listening to this single is a perfect way to spend just over three minutes of your time, and will leave you with a smile on your face in doing so.
