Now I have been lucky today, I have a second Darla Bower single to review and this one is about my birth month and called November Skies, and normally where I come from they are usually slate grey and unyielding.

There is an essence of that descriptive nature within the arrangement of this piece too, however like Novembers here in my new home of Cyprus we have one thing that we're most grateful for, and that's hope of better things to come.

That is also what I find in this delightfully descriptive musical narrative, we have the slowness and struggle of a pre winter month, but one combined with the hope of better days to come and the gratitude of being able to enjoy the moment.

Darla Bower has to be one of the most descriptive pianists I have heard and one can get totally lost in her music.
