Robert Linton's skill at producing ambient guitar is pretty much unmatched globally; he has a wonderfully gentle and calming style, on this his latest single entitled Snowfall on the Eve we are gifted well over eight minutes of some of the most relaxing acoustic brilliance you're ever likely to hear.

I deeply admire Linton's technique, his tranquil tones and constructs are bathed here on this amazing single, with a multi instrumentally layered pastiche of crafted genius.

It's amazing to think that this is Linton's first single, but I doubt it will be his last. If you are searching for a track that exemplifies the chill of winters reach and the tendrils of snowy ice falling from sullen heavy grey skies, then this is your composition.

Linton is fast becoming a master architect, a builder of arrangements and pieces that literally play out before your eyes, a beauty of a track indeed, and as a single, utterly transcendent.
