

Sing Me of Winter

By

Lisa Swerdlow

Written by

Steve Sheppard

The world is awash with winter and seasonal singles at the moment, but here is one that really stands out from the rest, it comes from pianist Lisa Swerdlow and is entitled Sing Me of Winter.

Her performance is bright and energetic and the string sections mould the symphonic backdrop of this her latest single beautifully. This has a feel to a TV theme of sorts, and has a wonderful fluent catch about its construction that makes the offering truly addictive to listen to

The interplay with Swerdlow's piano and the added multi instrumentation is a blissful symbiotic partnership of musical cleverness, one that drives along this most attractive narrative of tone. I would imagine this one will be most popular with her fans and the many listeners of really good seasonal music out there.