Annie Locke is back with a new Christmas single to end what has been an excellent year for her. Silent Night is her chosen piece and her arrangement of it is stylish and a totally fresh take on the original offering.

We are gifted a really nice and light composition here, a bright empowering key and an in-depth, but transcendent melody. There is something about Locke's version that is very listenable, it's one of those offerings that you could leave on repeat for hours and not even notice, or even think about it, just enjoying all it has to offer.

Her performance is so well crafted it is a pleasure to listen to it over many times to truly enjoy all the motifs and nuances contained within, and thus a holiday single I think the fans and listeners are going to absolutely love.
