The work of pianist Lisa Swerdlow has been really maturing over the last few months, to a level that now, much of her music could be considered film score standard. This new single is top of that stack, when I first heard Lasting Impressions; it made me think instantly of a movie theme.

This smooth, multi-instrumental in nature offering by the pianist, shows a wealth of class with not only it's production, but from the performance itself, which in my view is easily the most passionate and emotional we have heard thus far from Swerdlow, and as such, should, if there is any justice in the world, take the charts by storm.

Personally I really like this single and I hope it will resonate with you as well; it is a fine example of the artist's professional and emotional natures coming together, to bring us something truly special and deeply moving, and as it says on the can, make a lasting impression.
